

OTTO DILLE® - Anniversary 2008!

For exactly 100 years Otto Dille® (www.otto-dille.de) has been dealing with the import and export of vegetable tanning agents and has developed into a trading company known far beyond Germany.

In 1908 Otto Dille founded a trading company under his name for vegetable tanning agents. Since the mid thirties Herbert Baeck was initially a joint partner and in 1943 after the death of Otto Dille became sole owner of the company which then developed into one of the largest distributors of vegetable tanning agents on the domestic and international market. He recognized the fact quite early that the production of leather would be relocated more and more from the European industrial nations to Third World Countries and consequently attached special importance to business relationships with North Africa, Asia and Central America. Due to this business policy the company does not only have a major market share in Germany as well as in some West and East European countries, but also regularly supplies tanneries and chemical companies abroad. For many decades Otto Dille® has been representing large manufacturers of wattle-bark extracts as well as Quebracho and chestnut extracts. Otto Dille® also trades in fruit, bark and some special extracts such as Myrabolan, Sumach, Tara and Valonea extracts.

In addition to the worldwide trade with vegetable tanning agents Otto Dille® is dealing with the sales of Lignosulphonates. The product range includes a series of different types, standard qualities as well as special productions. Not only customers from tanneries, but the clientele also includes manufacturers of chemical products, chipboard, herbicides and pesticides agents, fertilisers and animal feed.

As from the middle of 2003 a merger of the group of companies Otto Dille GmbH & Co. KG into Baeck GmbH & Co. KG took place and since then is run as a separate department inside with Baeck & Co. The trademark Otto Dille® has been protected by Baeck & Co. in order to assure that in the future the name Otto Dille® will continue to exist. Otto Dille® is a company now in its third generation. This generation will continue to work on a policy focused on the customer.
